PREGNANCY CARE EVERY STEP OF THE WAY

The importance of maternity care

Throughout your pregnancy, you should have regular appointments with your healthcare provider. These visits will allow you to easily follow the progress of your baby's development and give you an opportunity to ask questions and prepare for childbirth and life with a new baby.

As soon as you think you might be pregnant, you should visit your healthcare provider. If you need to find a Preferred maternity care provider, you can visit fepblue.org/provider or download the fepblue app.

Know what to expect during your first prenatal visits

An average pregnancy lasts about 40 weeks, with the weeks grouped into three trimesters. The first trimester occurs during the first three months of your pregnancy. During this time your body undergoes many changes.

During your first trimester visits, you will:

Speak to your provider about your health history

Receive an ultrasound and important lab work

Discuss any pregnancy risk factors based on age, health and/or family history

Learn your due date
